The Raccoon Tax

Every summer my grandmother grew tomatoes along the back fence, and every summer she lost half of them to the same family of raccoons.

She never set traps. Instead she planted a second row, closer to the woods, and called it the raccoon tax.

Of course, budgeting for a problem is not the same as ignoring it.